KAISER PLANS TO ROUND OUT SON'S EDUCATION AT HARVARD COLLEGE

PRINCE AUGUST WILHELM OF GERMANY.

This picture is from the most recent photograph of the Kaiser's fourth son, showing him in his uniform as first lieutenant of the second Grenadier Guards. The photograph was taken by E. Hoyer studio of Berlin.

Seeks American Spirit of Democracy for German Prince August Wilhelm Now Officer in Army.

A real Prince, no less a man than the fourth son of Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany, is to come to Harvard University. If the present plan of his royal father are carried out.

The full name is August Wilhelm, born in 1894, at Gumbel, near Berlin, Germany, which the Emperor's father, Kaiser Wilhelm, will probably shorten to "Gus." If this be so, there will be very little of "Your Highness" and all that for this Prince of Germany, when he becomes a student at the Harvard University.

It is just one of the things which the Kaiser's son has in mind in giving his son an American finish as his education. He knows that the democratic spirit which the Prince will find here is impossible at a German university for a son of the Kaiser at least.

Prince a Good Fellow.
Prince August Wilhelm, as he is commonly known, is now nineteen years old. He is a pleasant, unaffected sort of a chap who will probably mix in with his fellow students and be as good a fellow as his opportunities will permit.

It is likely that he will be warmly welcomed by his fellow students, but he will be watched, however, by his father's attendants or companions, selected by the Kaiser. It would not do, of course, to let the young man get into any serious trouble, but it would reflect unfavorably on the house of Hohenzollern if such a thing happened.

Harvard is the great national college of the United States, and it is to be expected that the Prince will find it a most interesting place. He will be in the Harvard class of 1912, and will be a member of the Harvard Athletic Union, the Harvard Glee Club, and the Harvard College Orchestra. He will also be a member of the Harvard College Football Team.

ENDS BOY MURDERED IN WOODS

Medical Examiner Decides Housatonic Lad Victim of Mysterious Slayer.

TWO WOUNDS IN SKULL.

Special to the Boston American.—GREAT BARRINGTON, July 16.—That John Strick, the twelve-year-old Housatonic boy who was discovered near the edge of Rising Woods, yesterday, was murdered, was the decision announced by Medical Examiner John H. Butler after an autopsy today.

"I found two wounds on the boy's head which caused fractures, either one of which would have produced death," said Dr. Butler in a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter. "One of the fractures was at the base of the skull and the other near the face. Apparently they were made by some sharp-pointed instrument, though of course that cannot be positively determined."

Looking for Stranger.
Harriet Atkins Nason was expected today to take charge of the investigation. In the meantime the police are scouring the vicinity to find someone who saw the boy with a stranger early last week.

Strick was aged 12 years, was with John Strick at the time of the murder. He was a native of Housatonic, and his father, John Strick, was a farmer. He was a very quiet boy, and his mother, Mrs. Strick, was a very kind woman.

Strick was found in the woods near the edge of Rising Woods, yesterday. He was found by a stranger, who took him to his home. He was found with two wounds on his head, which caused fractures.

No Motive Is Known.
Although no motive has been discovered for the murder, the Stricks have left home when the murder occurred. It is believed that the boy was killed by a stranger, and that the mother, Mrs. Strick, was a very kind woman.

ABOUT EVELYN'S LIFE

MRS. HOLMAN, MOTHER OF EVELYN THAW

In First Interview Since Killing of White, Mother of Thaw's Wife Declares That Tales Told of Daughter Are False and Malicious.

BY BOSTON AMERICAN LEASED WIRE.

PITTSBURG, July 16.—Heartbroken by the sensational stories that have been told about her daughter, which she denounces as foul and malicious lies, Mrs. Evelyn Florence Nesbit Holman, mother of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, for the first time has broken the silence she has maintained since her daughter's husband, Harry K. Thaw, shot and killed Stanford White.

In a recalled lasting four hours, interrupted now and then as the mother's grief overcame her, Mrs. Holman gave the BOSTON AMERICAN her story of her daughter's early life.

Throughout the whole time the loss of the mother for her beautiful daughter imposed her. She resented fiercely the insinuations that have been made that she did not rear and guard her child as a mother should.

By Mrs. Evelyn Florence Nesbit-Holman.

Only God can know how I have suffered. I have tried to be strong. I have tried to be brave, but without my husband's counsel and help I could not have borne the heart pain.

No one in the world can realize except a mother. I have read these awful stories, and they seemed like arrows to pierce the heart through and through. I have a mother's heart. I have a mother's love. Oh, I wish, I wish I could tell it all.

Tried to Train Child as Mother Should.
I must, I must tell, I have stood in this life long too long now. When I have said that I didn't guide and guard my child as a mother should, a greater lie could not be uttered.

Most of these awful stories have to do with the stage when Evelyn first went on the stage. It has been said that I put her on the stage. It is a lie, it is a lie, it is a lie.

When I was left with the children I was lonely with the needle and made Evelyn's gown. I sent her to the public school, here in Pittsburgh, and my one thought in life was to educate her and to train her right. And to think that people should now say, "It's the mother's fault."

Yes, I did send her to dancing school. I sent her to learn to dance, because all her little friends went to dancing school, and she wanted to go with them. She had to learn to dance and to sing.

Well, to tell you that I put an offer to go to Philadelphia. It was to be a designing, no-design gown. I think I put in part we went to Philadelphia and lived in Arch street.

Eyes Opened as to Daughter's Beauty.
Of course, I thought Evelyn was just right, but I never had thought her especially beautiful. But one day soon after we arrived in Philadelphia my eyes were opened. It seems that just before we left Pittsburgh I had let Evelyn go with some friends on a vacation at Cresson.

Just in Philadelphia I was out with a friend and suddenly Evelyn jumped in the car and shouted. Then she ran better-dressed into a big man's arms.

She thought the man up to me and introduced him, but I have forgotten his name now.

"Maxine," she explained, "this is the great artist from Philadelphia who wanted to meet me when at Cresson. He says I have such an ideal, almost perfect nose."

Became Model for Artists by Accident.
It was in this accidental way that the girl came to be a model for artists. The man showed, and finally I let him introduce Evelyn to a Mrs. Harnish, who kept a studio in Chestnut street.

Mrs. Harnish was a fine woman and invited us to her home for dinner. It came out at the dinner that she thought all the time that we were society people. Anyway, she asked Evelyn to pose for her, and that is the way she became a model. I went to the studio with her and found everything was all right. I always did that as long as she was a model.

Such lies as they have told. Never would I let her pose in the nude. I positively forbade it, and she obeyed me.

I think Evelyn was still sixteen when we left Philadelphia for New York. She was to be a model there, and wanted to go because in that city there were more and greater artists.

But I was going to answer their questions. They say, "Her mother put her on the stage." False, false, as any word can be, and forbid! I didn't put her on the stage. I wouldn't put a child of mine on the stage. I found myself as earnestly as a mother could. But Evelyn had been stage-struck for some time.

Then say I went with her to Mr. Lederer. False! She brought Mr. Lederer to me. Mr. Lederer was as good as a man could be to the girl. There have been some awful stories about Evelyn being named in a Lederer advertisement. False! False as it can be. Why, Mr. Lederer watched her like a father. He said to me:

Promised to Make Her Famous Actress.
"She is a beautiful girl—exceedingly handsome, and I'll make her as famous as I wish Edna May." He did everything a man could do to see that Evelyn did not lose sight of her object, which was to be a great actress. He said to me:

"Don't let her go home alone. Don't let her go even to rehearsal alone. Come to the stage door with her. He'll be with her always."

And these very remarks I followed. Never was she alone coming from or going to the theatre.

At this point in her narrative, Mrs. Holman was interrupted by her husband.

"There, dear," said Mr. Holman kindly, "don't say any more, you might say too much. Do not talk of the Thaw case or of White."

"No, I mustn't," said Mrs. Holman, "but there will come a time when I can talk."

"But can't you say how Evelyn got out from under your control?" was the inquiry.

Not now, not now," replied Mrs. Holman. "She was never out at night, never." said Mrs. Holman. "If Mr. Lederer took her out to dinner he asked me to go along. He was a kind good man to her, and that was all."

"I remember just one night that she was out late. When she came in the next day, you see, Mrs. Nesbit, I promised to see that she got home all right."

"Yes, but you promised to come home at a reasonable hour."

"This is a reasonable hour to my profession," was the answer.

"And then—this was the truth."

"I've wanted to, God knows, I've wanted to," answered the mother.

"Then she let her lips and said no more."

"It was that you introduced your daughter to Stanford White?"

"It is false," exclaimed Mrs. Holman.

French Scientist Upsets Idea of Centuries and Throtes Monkey From His Pedestal

DOGS CAN TALK WITH THEIR FACES MOST LIKE MEN

EMOTIONS AS EXPRESSED BY THE HUMAN FACE AND THOSE DISPLAYED BY CANINES COMPARED BY CAMERA

Paced in the interest of science for the Boston American by Miss Mabel Wibur of the "Tourists" Company of the Majestic Theatre. Photos of notes thoroughly taken for the Boston American.

Friend of Man Has a Wonderful Power of Revealing Effect of His Ideas in His Countenance as Result of the Affinity Between Him and the Human Race.

PARIS, July 16.—That man has the greatest power of facial expression of all the vertebrate animals, and that the dog comes next, and the monkey third, was the statement made today by the Institute of Psychology after years of experiment and research.

It has been the general belief that the monkey which, according to scientists, is the nearest approach to man, surpassed him in facial expression.

The monkey has been thought to be a caricature of the human being, that it had been taken for granted that the facial expressions were next to those of man in variety and power of expression.

It was, therefore, Professor French, who conducted the experiments, that the dog comes next to man, and the monkey third, in the power of facial expression.

Professor French has been looking for the truth for the last few years, and he has now, after the greatest power of facial expression, that the dog comes next to man, and the monkey third, in the power of facial expression.

He has shown that the dog's face is more expressive than the monkey's, and that the monkey's face is more expressive than the human's.
